"Is she with you because of your looks, your job, your sports, the fine dining, or the gifts you buy her? Or is she the real deal, your significant other, your ride-or-die chick, your alter ego, the one you'll commit to for the rest of your life?"

If the answer to the first question is a 'Hello no' and a big, fat 'Yes!' to the latter, you'll definitely want to be smart about showing her what an amazingly thoughtful man you can be.

commercial day in February, of all months?", or even come up with 10 solid reasons why you shouldn't have to follow a day some unknown person came up with... or you could simply take my advice and just celebrate!" laughs Noël.

"Guess what? Valentine's Day is the one day where you actually have no thinking to do and don't have to come up with excitement and originality. All she cares about is affirmation that you care for her and that she means the world to you. So, how do you get that reaction?"

"Find out what her love language is. Ask her point blank, 'Are you a rose girl or do you prefer a candlelight dinner?' 'Would you like a couple's massage or new earrings for Valentine's Day?'. The surprise effect can still be achieved despite getting her involved and now that she sees how you're thinking of her and how to please her, you'll be scoring points."

Roses will always be a surefire hit, though. As she points out: "A simple bouquet of roses buys you equity for the future. Equity? Yes, she'll cut you some slack for many other little things you'll do wrong because you will have shown her that you love her on a day when it will have meaning to her."

More easy suggestions that are sure to please, big time, include:

- Bringing her breakfast in bed with a mimosa.
- Getting a good bottle of wine, lighting candles and cooking dinner.
- Being a tourist in your own city. (Get a hotel and go sightseeing!)
- Organizing a weekend getaway.

- Sitting beside her at a restaurant rather than in front of her.
- Giving her a full body massage like you never have before.
- Reading her a chapter of a Harlequin Romance novel.
- Telling her how great she makes you feel or how lucky you are to have her in your life.

See, totally easy.
